

TeleGeography, a U.S.-based international telecom research firm known for its authoritative, data-driven research, is expanding its research staff with a new Research Analyst position. This analyst will join a team focused on collecting, processing, and analyzing data on network services and pricing for the global telecom market.

The analysts' responsibilities will include:

- Regular written analysis of market trends
- Data gathering (generally through direct contact with industry players)
- Data management
- Development of data charts and infographics
- Development of new research contacts and maintaining existing relationships at leading international carriers
- Promotion of TeleGeography's research at international conferences and client meetings

Candidates for this position should meet the following requirements:

- Excellent academic background. Graduate-level academic experience is a significant advantage, but not a prerequisite.
- Intellectual curiosity. We seek to hire individuals who are unafraid to jump into new fields of study and are interested in international markets.
- Interest in the Middle East and Africa regions. Research experience and/or relevant language skills in these regions is a plus.
- Outstanding writing and analytical skills with an ability to meet tight deadlines.
- Entrepreneurial spirit. An interest in developing new ideas and creating new relationships to expand business opportunities.
- Must be able to work in U.S without sponsorship.

The following items are considered ideal, but are NOT prerequisites:

- Quantitative experience. Proficiency in Excel or other data analytics platforms is a strong differentiator.
- General understanding of international telecommunications infrastructure.
- Interest in maps, foreign cultures, governments, and economies.

TeleGeography offers a competitive salary, collegial atmosphere, and an outstanding downtown District of Columbia location. If you're ready to put your research skills and industry knowledge to work in a growing, well-respected boutique research firm, we want to hear from you.
